Hello,

Eminent domain is an age-old and viable remedy for even today's complicated financial failure of leveraged offerings through the matrix.

Clearly, these mortgage back instruments were designed for the quick and the greedy. It is a shame that our economic system must be driven by greed and avarice.

Having done nothing wrong (except trust Countrywide and BofA), and as a disabled couple who have lived in our home for ten years, we are on the road to losing our home--through our inability to 'tender back' the net value)

So, as citizens who need all the help we can get, I condone any measure which seeks to eradicate the effects of greedy, profit driven systems, which even bet against their own securities through Credit Default Swaps-----you have got to know something is desperately wrong when money is made on CDS.

Break up the top five banks, and enact a modern version of Glass-Steagall----then start with principle reductions. How about we re-start the economy, Mr. DeMarco?

This is the right thing to do.

Thank you,

John
